TIME TO PLANT AND INSTRUCTIONS FOR ORDERING

The usual time of transplanting daylilies is early spring or early fall. Early fall is preferable to late fall. When transplanting is done late in the fall or after the soil is too cold for root growth winter injury to the crowns of the plants may result. In the lower South planting may be done anytime.

The plants here listed are true to name to the best of my knowledge and are guaranteed to arrive in good condition. Should any mistakes or losses occur replacements or adjustments will be gladly made.

We endeavor to give plants as large as possible for the price. The rarer plants where the stock is very limited may be small, but when good growing conditions are provided it is surprising how soon a small plant will develop to a satisfactory clump.

Plants are subject to prior sale. Terms are cash with the order. Postage will be paid to zone 3. If beyond zone 3 add ten percent of the order for postage.
